one possible version:

Dear David,

It's great to know that you are going to learn the traditional Chinese musical instrument erhu, and I'm writing to offer some advice for your concern about the impact on other courses.

To ensure learning erhu gives way to your schedule for other courses, I strongly recommend an erhu club in the city centre, which gives lessons only on Sunday morning. It's about ten minutes' bus ride from our school. Not only can you learn from the real masters of erhu, you can also make new friends in the club.

I hope my suggestion can be of some help. Don't hesitate to ask me if you have any other questions. Looking forward to hearing more about your studying erhu.

Yours,

Li Hua

第二节

Grandpa held my hand tightly. We stepped off the curb and not until he confirmed I was safe to cross did he let go of my hand. "Go for it," Grandpa said, patting me on the shoulder gently. On hearing that, I dashed out, overwhelmed with joy. I ran faster than ever before, my coin held tightly in my sweaty palm. The street seemed wide. I was wondering if I would make it when I arrived at the other side. Turning around, I saw my Grandpa. There he was, standing exactly where I had left him. I waved to my Grandpa proudly.

My heart pounded more wildly as I approached the Coke machine. I couldn't wait to walk directly to it and feed the coin. I had dreamed about this moment many times. The big old monster greedily swallowed my coin. Reaching up on tiptoes, I grabbed one. Coke in hand, I proudly marched back. Grandpa was waiting patiently, his face spreading in a satisfied smile. Looking around, he yelled, "Come on, now." I moved swiftly across the street and threw myself into his arms. What a thrilling experience! Years later, whenever I think of my Grandpa, his love and warmth is still like a road to accompany me through my life.
